The Southland Corporation, Jack H. Meng, and Wendy C. Meng, doing business as 7-Eleven #13578 (appellants), appeal from a decision of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control¹ which suspended their license for 15 days for their clerk, Gary S. Los Banos, having sold an alcoholic beverage (a 22-ounce bottle of Samuel Adams Boston Lager) to Matthew Coulson, a 17-year-old minor decoy, said sale being contrary to the universal and generic public welfare and morals provisions of the California Constitution, article XX, §22, arising from a violation of Business and Professions Code §25658, subdivision (a).

Appearances on appeal include appellants The Southland Corporation, Jack H. Meng, and Wendy C. Meng, appearing through their counsel, Ralph Barat ¹The decision of the Department, dated November 19, 1998, is set forth in the appendix.

Saltsman and Stephen Warren Solomon, and the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, appearing through its counsel, Jonathon E. Logan.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Appellants' off-sale beer and wine license was issued on October 12, 1990. Thereafter, the Department instituted an accusation against them on April 7, 1998, charging an unlawful sale of an alcoholic beverage to a minor on January 31, 1998.

An administrative hearing was held on August 28, 1998, at which time oral and documentary evidence was received regarding the allegedly unlawful sale.

Subsequent to the hearing, the Department issued its decision which determined that the sale had occurred as alleged in the accusation, and ordered a 15-day suspension.

Appellants thereafter filed a timely notice of appeal. In their appeal, appellants raise the following issues: (1) the Department violated Rule 141(b)(5); (2) the Department violated Rule 141(b)(2); (3) the Department violated appellants' discovery rights; and (4) the Department violated Government Code §11512, subdivision (d), by failing to provide a court reporter at the discovery hearing.

DISCUSSION

I

Appellants contend that the Department violated Rule 141(b)(5), which requires that the decoy make a face to face identification of the seller prior to the issuance of any citation. Appellants concede the decoy identified the seller, but assert that it was not face to face, as the rule requires. They claim that the decoy entered through the doorway and merely responded affirmatively to the officer's inquiry as to who the seller was. This, they claim, was why the clerk was not aware that the identification process was transpiring, and, therefore, not face to face.

The decision expressly rejects as not credible the clerk's testimony that the decoy did not reenter the store to identify him. Accepting the possibility that the clerk may not have heard the decoy identify him, the decision nevertheless concludes that there was compliance with the rule.

In our opinion, the identification that the rule requires was made. The decoy identified the seller to the police officer while the decoy was looking at the seller. The seller's face was visible to the decoy and the police officer, and the seller was within a reasonable distance from them at the time of the identification. The seller was aware, or should reasonably have been aware, that an identification process was occurring, by reason of the words and/or actions of the decoy and the police officer, singling him out as the one who sold to the person making the identification.

The decoy testified [RT 23, 28-29] that he identified the clerk after he made the purchase, left the store, and met the police officers waiting outside:

Q: Did you go back in the store?

A: I went back inside the store and identified the clerk.

Q: How did you do that? What happened when you went back inside?

A: Just followed Officer Chassen and the two other officers in. He just asked looking directly at the clerk and said 'Was this the guy who sold to you' and I said 'Yes.' And I turned around and left."

Q: With as much precision as you can tell us, where were you standing when Chassen asked you which clerk it was?

A: I was approximately like five, six feet from the counter. I just walked to the door, walked in a couple steps, pointed at him, and turned around and left.

THE COURT: What? Five or six feet from the counter?

THE WITNESS: I just walked in the door.

THE COURT: And then?

THE WITNESS: And then I just pointed because the door's right here, and the counter's right here, somewhat close.

Q: BY MR. SALTSMAN: ... The door's five to eight feet away from the counter?

A: I believe so, yes.

Q: And you just walked into the door –

A: I walked about five or six feet from the counter and he looked at the gentleman and said "Was this the clerk that sold to you?" And I said, "Yes," and he was looking directly at the guy.

Q: Were you pointing or not?

A: I didn't point and say it was the guy. He asked me. He said "Is this the gentleman." I said "Yes."

Given that the police officer and the decoy were only five to eight feet away from the clerk when the identification occurred, the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) may have been charitable in assuming that the clerk might not have heard the decoy name him as the seller. But even accepting that, it defies credulity to think that the clerk was unaware of what was occurring when, as the record shows, a police officer has just told him he has sold to a minor, and the decoy, who has reentered the store and is only a few feet away, confirms to the officer which clerk it was who made the sale.

II

Appellants contend that the decoy lacked the appearance which could reasonably be expected of a person under the age of 21 years because he was tall (5'11"), calm, carried himself with a sophisticated demeanor, was comfortable and not nervous during the decoy operation, and chose a product typically chosen by older, more sophisticated buyers.

The ALJ expressly found that the appearance and demeanor of the decoy, who was two weeks short of 18 years of age at the time of the sale, was that of a person under the age of 21. He also specifically addressed the choice of beverage, finding it to have been an “innocent choice” - the decoy testified that he simply picked the bigger bottle, “the first thing I saw.” The ALJ also discounted the decoy’s lack of nervousness as not uncommon.

This is a decision where it is clear the ALJ had Rule 141(b)(2) and its requirements in mind, and was satisfied the decoy’s appearance complied with the rule. Since there is no indication the ALJ applied an improper standard, his factual determination should be sustained.

III

Appellants claim they were prejudiced in their ability to defend against the accusation by the Department’s refusal and failure to provide them discovery with respect to the identities of other licensees alleged to have sold, through employees, representatives or agents, alcoholic beverages to the decoy involved in this case, during the 30 days preceding and following the sale in this case.

This is but one of a number of cases where appeals of interlocutory discovery rulings are presented together with the appeal of the Department’s suspension or revocation order.² All of such cases present the same or very similar issue with respect to discovery, and all require a similar result.

When the Department objected to appellants’ request for the names of other licensees who had sold to the decoy in question, appellants followed the procedure set out in §11507.7. A hearing was held before the ALJ on appellants’ motion to compel discovery, following which the ALJ denied the motion.

Any analysis of this issue must start with the recognition that discovery is much more limited in administrative proceedings than in civil cases. Each has its own discovery provisions, and they are very different. Discovery in civil cases is governed by the Civil Discovery Act, found in the Code of Civil Procedure, §§2016-2036. Discovery in administrative proceedings is controlled by the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), in Government Code §§11507.5-11507.7, the complete text of which is set forth in the Appendix.

The Civil Discovery Act is broadly inclusive, authorizing a number of techniques for obtaining information from an adversary in the course of litigation and expressly states that the matter sought need not be admissible if it “appears reasonably calculated” that it will lead to admissible evidence. Section 2017 provides that a party may obtain discovery

“regarding any matter not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action ... if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.”

Section 2019 of the Civil Discovery Act spells out the methods of discovery available. These include oral and written depositions; interrogatories to a party; inspection of documents, things and places; physical and mental examinations; requests for admissions; and simultaneous exchanges of expert trial witness information.

The APA, on the other hand, is more restrictive, specifying (in §11507.5) that “The provisions of §11507.6 provide the exclusive right to and method of discovery as to any proceeding governed by this chapter.” Section 11507.6 then spells out specific types of material that are discoverable, and does not include any provision for permitting discovery of material that is not specifically listed or provided for in that section. The section limits discoverable material, by its very terms, to that which is more or less directly related to the acts or omissions giving rise to the administrative proceeding, thereby helping ensure that the material will be relevant. Only subdivision (e) requires specifically that material discoverable under that subdivision be relevant and admissible.

The sweeping methods and tools of discovery available in superior court proceedings through the Civil Discovery Act are conspicuously absent from the APA's discovery provisions. There is no language in the APA's discovery provisions at all comparable to the language in the Civil Discovery Act which spells out the broad scope and methods of discovery there authorized.

We find little relevance, and less persuasion, in the cases cited by appellants in support of their contention that the Civil Discovery Act provisions should apply in administrative proceedings. The cases cited arise, for the most part, in the context of civil judicial proceedings and address only issues under the Civil Discovery Act.

Arnett v. Dal Cielo (1996) 14 Cal.4th 4 [56 Cal.Rptr.2d 706], a case upon which appellants rely heavily, held that an investigative subpoena issued by the Medical Board of California was not "discovery" within the specific legal meaning of that term³ in a statute providing that certain hospital peer review records were "not subject to discovery," and affirmed lower court orders enforcing subpoenas directed at such records. Although the case arose in the context of an administrative agency proceeding, it involved an administrative investigation, not an adjudicatory proceeding, and the question of what discovery was available in an administrative adjudicatory proceeding was not before the Court.

³ The "specific legal meaning" of the word "discovery" was stated by the Court to be "the formal exchange of evidentiary information and materials between parties to a pending action"; this was in contrast to the general definition of "discover" as "the ascertainment of that which was previously unknown; the disclosure or coming to light of what was previously hidden." (14 Cal.4th at 20.)

We disagree vehemently with appellants' argument, based upon Arnett (and amounting to mental sleight-of-hand), that since the Court stated that the word "discovery" had the same legal meaning when used in the APA as in the Civil Discovery Act, it logically follows that "the rules governing the discovery process in the Administrative Procedure Act are identical to the rules governing the discovery process in the Civil Discovery Act."

The Court actually held to the contrary in Arnett when it discussed adjudicatory administrative disciplinary proceedings under the APA. The APA, the Court observed at page 23, embodies "a special statutory scheme ... 'providing the exclusive right to and method of discovery' in proceedings under the Administrative Procedure Act" such as administrative hearings on disciplinary charges. Thus, even if the word "discovery" has the same legal meaning in both discovery acts, that is no basis, in logic or in law, to import into an administrative proceeding the broad, sweeping discovery techniques provided for in civil litigation by the Civil Discovery Act.

Appellants also cite Shively v. Stewart (1966) 55 Cal.Rptr. 217 [421 P.2d 651], for the proposition that the same rules of discovery apply in the context of administrative proceedings as in proceedings governed by the Code of Civil Procedure. However, Shively was decided prior to the adoption of the APA discovery provisions in Government Code §§11507.5 through 11507.7. Shively, therefore, has little value as a precedent regarding the applicability or interpretation of APA discovery provisions, since the Court did not have the opportunity to address the code provisions which govern in this case. The Court simply determined that some sort of discovery was available in administrative proceedings, even without specific statutory authority. But, even there, the Court voiced the caveat that "to secure discovery, there must be a showing of more than a wish for the benefit of all the information in the adversary's files." (Shively v. Stewart, supra, 55 Cal.Rptr. at 221.)

Similarly, Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 Cal.4th 1599 [56 Cal.Rptr.2d 341], did not involve an adjudicatory administrative proceeding; it was a civil action alleging an insurance company's bad faith in defending against a legal malpractice claim. The Court held only that liability reserves established in a malpractice action, and reinsurance records, were discoverable under the broad scope of the Civil Discovery Act and the case law interpreting it, since they might lead to the discovery of admissible evidence on the issues raised in a bad faith action.

"[T]he exclusive right to and method of discovery as to any proceeding governed by [the APA]" is provided in §11507.6. (Gov. Code, §11507.5.) The plain meaning of this is that any right to discovery that appellants may have in an administrative proceeding before the Department must fall within the list of specific items found in Government Code §11507.6, not in the Civil Discovery Act. This view is supported by Romero v. California State Labor Commissioner (1969) 276 Cal.App.2d 787 [81 Cal.Rptr. 281, 284]:

"Except for disciplinary proceedings before the State Bar, . . . the Civil Discovery Act (Code Civ.Proc., §2016 et seq.) does not apply to administrative adjudication. (See Shively v. Stewart, supra; Everett v. Gordon (1968) 266 A.C.A. 732, 72 Cal.Rptr. 379; Comments, Discovery in State Administrative Adjudication (1958), 56 Cal.L.Rev. 756; and Discovery Prior to Administrative Adjudications—A Statutory Proposal (1964) 52 Cal.L.Rev. 823.)" [Emphasis added.]

In addition, §11507.7 requires that a motion to compel discovery pursuant to §11507.6 "shall state . . . the reason or reasons why the matter is discoverable

under that section” [Emphasis added.]

Therefore, we believe that appellants are limited in their discovery request to those items that they can show fall clearly within the provisions of §11507.6.

Appellants contend that their request for the names and addresses of licensees who, within 30 days before and after the date of the sale here, sold alcoholic beverages to the decoy in this case falls within §11507.6, subdivision (1), which entitles a party to “the names and addresses of witnesses to the extent known to the other party, including, but not limited to, those intended to be called to testify at the hearing,”

The ALJ, in ruling on appellants’ Motion to Compel, concluded that the licensees whose names appellants have requested were not “witnesses” because they did not see or hear the transaction alleged in the accusation.

Appellants have argued that §11507.6 does not limit the “witnesses” in this subdivision to percipient witnesses, or those who observed the acts alleged in the accusation. They assert that they are merely trying to ascertain the names of people who could provide information that would go to testing the credibility of the decoy who will be called as a witness by the Department. We must decide, therefore, whether the term “witnesses” as used in §11507.6 includes only percipient witnesses.

General definitions of the term “witness” are so broad that they are not helpful in determining the meaning of the term in the context of administrative discovery. California Code of Civil Procedure §1878 defines “witness” as “a person whose declaration under oath is received as evidence for any purpose, whether such declaration be made on oral examination, or by deposition or affidavit.” This definition obviously refers to anyone who gives testimony in a trial or by affidavit or deposition. It is not limited to those who are percipient witnesses or even to those whose testimony is relevant. Another sense of the word “witness” is that of one who has observed an act and can remember and tell about what he or she has observed. This definition is even broader than the statutory one; it includes anyone who has seen anything and who can communicate to others what he or she has seen. Since discovery, whether the broader civil discovery or the narrower administrative discovery, is not intended to be a “fishing expedition,” these definitions are clearly too broad and not particularly helpful to us in determining what “witness” means in §11507.6.

There is implicit in appellants’ argument a basic appeal to fairness in the application of Rule 141. They argue that knowledge of the decoy’s experience and actions in other establishments is essential to a meaningful cross-examination, to ensure that the decoy has not confused the transaction in their premises with what occurred in another on the same night or other nights during the period for which such information was requested.

For example, appellants point out (and the transcripts of almost every minor decoy case that has come to this board confirm) that a decoy will almost invariably visit a number of licensed premises on a single evening, and make purchases at several. The decoy’s testimony regarding what occurred with the sellers at those locations where he or she was successful in purchasing an alcoholic beverage is, appellants assert, critical, and the ability to test the veracity and reliability of such testimony crucial. They argue that other clerks who sold to that decoy will be able to offer relevant and admissible evidence of such things as the decoy’s physical appearance, mannerisms, demeanor, manner of dress, and as well as other circumstances of the decoy operation, such as timing and sequence, which would assist in their efforts to effect a full and fair cross-examination.

We find appellants' arguments persuasive up to a point. In certain situations we can see some potential value to appellants in the experience of other sellers with the same decoy. The relevance of these experiences, however, sharply dissipates as they become more removed in time from the transaction in question.

In all other subdivisions of §11507.6, the discoverable items are limited by their pertinence to the acts or omissions which are the subject of the proceeding. "Witnesses" in subdivision (1) must also be limited so that a discovery request does not become a "fishing expedition." It should not be limited, however, as strictly as the Department would have it, nor expanded as broadly as appellants contend.

We believe that a reasonable interpretation of the term "witnesses" in §11507.6 would entitle appellants to the names and addresses of the other licensees, if any, who sold to the same decoy as in this case, in the course of the same decoy operation conducted during the same work shift as in this case. This limitation will help keep the number of intervening variables at a minimum and prevent a "fishing expedition" while ensuring fairness to the parties in preparing their cases.

IV

Appellants contend that the decision of the ALJ to conduct the hearing on their discovery motion without a court reporter present⁴ also constituted error, citing Government Code §11512, subdivision (d), which provides, in pertinent part, that "the proceedings at the hearing shall be reported by a stenographic reporter." The Department contends that this reference is only to the evidentiary hearing, and not to a hearing on a motion where no evidence is taken.

We do not find the case law cited by either party particularly helpful. We read most of the authorities cited by appellants as concerned with disputes involving the preparation and certification of a trial transcript in connection with an appeal. We do think, however, that regulations of the Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH), which hears administrative cases under the Administrative Procedure Act for many agencies, provide significant guidance. The Department cites OAH Rule 1022, which deals with motions. Subdivision (h) of that rule leaves it to the discretion of the ALJ whether a motion hearing is recorded, stating that the ALJ “may” order that the proceedings on a motion be reported. (1 Cal. Code Regs., §1022, subd. (h).)

In addition, OAH has promulgated Rule 1038 dealing with “Reporting of Hearings.” Subdivision (a) of that rule states that “Reporting of Hearings shall be in accordance with section 11512(d) [of the Government Code].” Subdivision (b) then says, “In the discretion of the ALJ, matters other than the Hearing may be reported.” “Hearing” is defined in Rule 1002(a)(4) (1 Cal. Code Regs., §1002, subd. (a)(4)) as “the adjudicative hearing on the merits of the case.” Therefore, OAH Rule 1038 also supports the Department’s position that the hearing on the motion did not need to be recorded.

An analogous authority, Code of Civil Procedure §269, does not include motions among the components of a trial which must be reported and a transcript thereof prepared for an appeal, when requested by a party or directed by the court.

Appellants assert that, without a record, the Appeals Board is deprived of the benefit of arguments made to the ALJ during the hearing on the Motion to Compel. We do not see how those arguments are relevant, and, even if so, why appellants cannot present them to the Board in their brief.

While there is no definitive statement in the APA as to whether motion hearings must be recorded, the regulations of OAH and the analogous provision for civil trials both indicate that recording is not required. This, coupled with the lack of practical disadvantage to appellants, compels us to find that recording was not required for the hearing on appellants' Motion to Compel.

ORDER

The decision of the Department is reversed and the case is remanded to the Department for compliance with appellants' discovery request, as limited herein, and for such other and further proceedings as are appropriate and necessary.⁵
